CHARLES W. TUTTLE KILLED ON THE RAILROAD TRACK

Was Walking Home To Greenland When Struck By Train

Charles W. Tuttle, age about 32, was killed some time Saturday night on the tracks of the Boston and Maine railroad near Greenland, worth crossing about a mile out of this city. The body was discovered shortly after one o'clock by the crew of the freight No. 224, but not in time to avoid running over it as it lay in the middle of the track.

The engineer of the freight saw the body lying in the middle of the outward bound track, but not until he was so close that it was impossible to stop the train and the locomotive and one or two cars passed over the body. The train was backed and the body was found to be that of a man, must have been dead some little time before he was discovered.

The body was badly mutilated and the face so much so that he could not be identified. The freight train backed town and in this city. He was a quite a gunner and a fisherman, and he knew every part of Great Bay and of the woods about Greenland.

He came to this city on Saturday evening to make some purchases and to get a supply of bread. He was seen shortly after ten o'clock and stated that he was going out on the last electric car, but evidently missed this car and started to walk home, and was making a short cut by the railroad track and was probably hit by an incoming train, possibly the 11:25 express and the body thrown over onto the other track.

He leaves a father, four brothers and two sisters.

BATTLESHIP MAINE ARRIVES AT YARD Returns From Her Wonderful Voyage Around The World

U. S. BATTLESHIP MAINE

Docked At Portsmouth Navy Yard At 8.15 This Forenoon, Ending Voyage With No Mishap

At precisely 8.15 this morning the big battleship Maine tied up at the coaling dock, coming alongside like an ordinary dory and without any display, the first battleship that has ever been at the yard was ready for repairs.

The big ship steamed through the entrance to the upper harbor and loomed out an admiral's salute of thirteen guns which was returned by the yard battery, in charge of Lieut. Commander A. B. Root, with a salute of seven guns for Commander Caperton, the commanding officer of the Maine.

There was nothing unusual to the men aboard the Maine in coming up to the dock and they smiled when it was hinted that the navy department had ordered sending a ship here on account of Henderson's Point.

The Maine was boarded by Yard Pilot Olsen this side of the Isles of Shoals at six o'clock this morning and he was assisted by Commander Caperton in bringing the ship up to the yard.

Said Commander Caperton of the Maine to the Herald reporter: "It was one of the best landings that I ever saw and a better landing was never made at any navy yard."

Pilot Olsen was on the bridge and from the moment he took charge a line never touched her. She steamed alongside and would not have broken an oar.

whole fleet dressed and as each ship was passed they, too, saluted. Returning to a point near the Connecticut she hoisted to, and the admirals and captains went aboard to pay their respects to and receive their final instructions from President Roosevelt. Soon they were back on their own ships and at ten o'clock the whole fleet got up anchor, and with the Mayflower in the lead the long white column headed for sea, cheered by the multitudes on ferries and lining the shore.

At the tail of the procession the Mayflower anchored and each ship in passing fired a farewell salute, and the great cruise had begun. That evening the news was circulated that after a short stay on the Pacific we would return to the Atlantic coast and we had our first idea of a cruise around the world.

January 6, we crossed the Equator at 35-16-30 west.

From that day till the 9th nothing unusual occurred. Suddenly, in the still night, a shout went up from the Missouri "Man overboard." Almost instantly the engines of the ships in her wake were reversed, life boats lowered and a search commenced. The Maine's boat was the first down, but it proved to be unnecessary exercise, caused by some dreamer shouting in his nightmare.

On Sunday, the 12th, at 4 p. m., we dropped anchor in the bay of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. A bundle of the local papers were distributed about, printed in Spanish, Portuguese and English, welcoming the fleet to Brazil. That evening we enjoyed a short heavy shower that cooled things wonderfully. Half a dozen Brazilian cruisers were in the harbor and the officers and men exchanged visits and courtesies. Special arrangements had been made for accommodations and excursions for the men on shore.

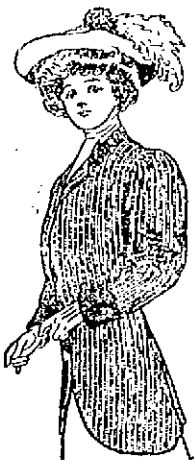

Rio is one of the most beautiful cities in the world and has many of the modern improvements that our own cities would do well to copy. Situated as it is on the western shore of the next largest harbor in the world and in the shadow of the giant Mount Corcovado, Rio presents a beautiful panorama, whether viewed from the mountain tops or from the ship.

The sea-wall and landings are unequalled in the United States and for main street is without a rival. We also saw the Monroe Palace that had been brought from the St. Louis Exposition. The architecture of some of the larger buildings is of heroic style, pleasing and restful to the eye accustomed to listless waters. On the 22nd we received mail from home but before it could be answered we sailed away early in the afternoon. The fleet left the harbor in reversed order, the flagship last, and each ship firing a national salute.

On January 31 we sighted Cape Virgin and at 4 p. m. we anchored off next morning in Possession Bay. On the morning of February 1 we got to anchor and by noon anchored in the harbor of Punta Arenas, Chile, the southernmost city of the world and a port where all steamers passing

NORTH KITTERY

Mrs. Rachel Fernald is still holding out bravely, although her ninety-six years are bearing heavily upon her. Mrs. Bartlett, her daughter, is in constant attendance upon her and everything is being done for the old lady's comfort.

A Stevenson has received several letters and several papers and many the views of Auckland, Sidney and other places in and around Australia, from his son, who is an officer on the U. S. S. Vermont. He reports a fine cruise.

Among the young ladies taking music lessons is Miss Nina Caswell, daughter of Charles Caswell, Esq. She, with Mrs. Pierce, gave a piano recital at the entertainment, which was very fine. She will, with good training, be a fine player.

The two Adams boys are reported as improving from their attacks of typhoid fever.

The entertainment at the First Methodist church was a very pleasant affair. Miss Blaney, Miss Cottle and Mrs. Purish were very pleasing in the parts they took. Miss Evans gave some the recitations and was recalled several times. She is quite popular with the young folks and is a fascinating teacher.

And Mason is getting ready to move into the house he recently bought of Mr. Chick. It was formerly owned by William Dargau.

It is announced that Pullman Car Company have made quite a reduction for passenger service on their cars running between this city and Boston.

The university of Maine football eleven won from New Hampshire seven to four at Orono, Me., on Saturday afternoon. Maine gained ground enough to make a much larger score, but lost many chances for touchdowns by ineffectual plays on third down. Except for a short time in the first half New Hampshire played entirely on the defensive, putting on the first down.

THE WEATHER

Over on the Hayes and Hett farms in this city is a forest and peat bog. In Merrimack county other fires are reported. From these probably came the smoke that has been bringing tears to the eyes of Portsmouth people today. It is so smoky that many people are leaving from the parished condition of their vocal organs. Perhaps some of the smoke came from Michigan and southwestern Ontario, but the freshness and sharpness of it are suggestive that it has but recently left the fire where it came.

The cloud that was blowing in the west has broken up and there is no prospect in sight for relief from the drought.

There is little breeze. The temperature was seventy degrees at five o'clock. The smoke was so thick that the sun could not pierce it otherwise the temperature must have been higher.

CITY BRIEFS

Once more we get the smoke. Republican rally at Music Hall tonight.

Now a fire commission is the latest.

Now for football games on the new playground.

Osgood Lodge, I. O. O. F. Fair, Nov. 10, 11, 12.

Christian Endeavor is now in the hands of the street department.

Have your shoes repaired at John Mott's, 21 Congress street.

The Water Works department are cleaning many tanks in the system about the city.

Do not miss the local news of the town. You can get it all everyday by reading the Herald.

The also now say the several Boston and Maine divisions will be reduced to three or four.

Season tickets 50 cents, for the I. O. O. F. Fair at Freeman's Hall. Up-to-date entertainment.

Portsmouth school teachers are said to be the best looking delegation in attendance at the last state meet in Manchester.

A well-known north end business man is going into the business of making potato chips and will locate on Congress street.

The Republican rally will be largely attended at Music Hall this evening. Senator Gillingham is always an interesting speaker.

The Maine people see great possibilities in the fact that two Maine men were elected on the Boston and Maine new board of directors.

LOST—On Saturday evening, at Music Hall, a silver purse containing a sum of money. Finder please return to this office. Reward offered.

The household effects of a Wind street will be sold at a private sale. People desiring to purchase should call from Wednesday, Oct. 21, to Saturday, Oct. 24.

Cobbles of Kittery is making head as an end on the Naval Academy football team. He is a rugged athlete and made of the right stuff to be a success on a football field.

Sunday was an ideal day and as a result the autumnal season was especially heavy. Nearly a hundred people in automobiles were here for lunch at the Rockingham hotel alone.

The Democratic candidate for governor is harping on the old story of the railroad. On this alone does he pin his faith of being elected governor and it is little hope at the best.

The 40 men are beginning to worry about their supply of fire, for the warm weather has drawn on their supply greater than they anticipated. The present drought is not adding to their good nature.

AS TOLD BY A BOSTON PAPER

What the Coming of the Battleship Means to Portsmouth

The Boston Journal of this morning published the following in regard to the coming of the battleship Maine today:

This swift, strong son Titan is going into drydock at the Portsmouth navy yard, across the Piscataqua river in the picturesque little town of Kittery. Since she threaded Macdonald and turned the Horn with the Atlantic battleship fleet and came home ahead of it with her sister, the Alabama, through the St. Lawrence and the Mediterranean sea, the Maine has picked upon her great hull a lot of queer, slimy, tangy things out of the waters she has crossed. Once laid up in all symmetry in the massive stone dock awaiting her, she will be shaven of all those blemishes. A general overhauling of her interior is also in store for her. All is ready at the navy yard to give her the thorough grooming she so fully deserves.

The arrival of the Maine marks a threefold epoch in the history of the Portsmouth navy yard. She will be the first battleship to be put into the drydock; she will be the first ship of the battle line of the new United States navy to come up to the yard, and she will be the first big war vessel to make harbor in the United States after the voyage around the world.

Ever since the great $2,000,000 drydock was hewn out of the solid rock, the people of this naval port have been expecting to see a real sea-fighter laid up there high and dry. In the docks of the Maine they see the realization of this desire. She is one of the "fastest of armchairs" living the starry fleet of the United States. More than that her world tour has invested her with rich romance and rare historical interest.

She is the first of the world-touring American battleships to complete the round-the-world globe-circling voyage through many ports. Though she comes to Portsmouth as one of the fleet's vanguard—the Alabama is the other—the arrival at an American port excites almost as much interest as though she came closely identified with Spain's fleet itself.

When the Maine comes in the river to the navy yard tomorrow morning, she will find it fine clear sailing when for years Henderson's point anchored submarines and pilots exercised with its southern proboscis, which vexed and irritated Piscataqua into a noisy swirl. Dynamite has cleaned all that. It took several years and a lot of government money to remove the obstruction, but a few days ago when it was first learned that the Maine was to bring up in Portsmouth, a diver and his wotter looking for and went down where the rocky roots of the Point once were. He found a mass of rock so free of habits that there was little trouble in walking over it in his clumsy shoes. To a depth of twenty feet or eighty feet the water was clear and the current is smooth and steady where the protruding obstructions of the Point has been nudged away by the explosives.

From that moment the glittering steel nose of the Maine is poking into the channel which links the lower harbor with the upper or "river" harbor, she will be watched by thousands of people. Though Portsmouth has seen many big warships, they have always swung gently and indifferently at their anchors down in the lower bay, never in the midst of the city and the navy yard. In this light, then, 7 o'clock in the morning will be none too early to hear the residents of Portsmouth and Kittery alike from doing prompt and positive homage to the returning Maine.

Portsmouthians are proud of their navy yard and proud of their dry dock. But above all else, they are mightily proud of their harbor. They believe it is the finest deep water harbor on either side of the coast. So it is that when the Maine in all her stateliness of hull and armaments of turret guns, comes up stream around Henderson's point to the navy yard and prepares to swing into the dock the people of this city and the kindred community of Kittery will also in spontaneous veneration of the water approach to this naval station.

FOREST FIRE ON THE HAYES AND HETT FARMS

Burning in a Peat Bed and Only a rain Can Put It Out

A good deal of the smoke about the city today, is due to the forest fire at the Hayes farm where the wood lots have been burning since Wednesday last. There is also a big blaze at the wood lot of August Hett which adjoins the Hayes farm. This is sweeping down lots of the growth.

Today a large crew of men were put to work at both places and are putting up a stiff fight in trying to check the blaze.

Up to today here after news has been stripped of everything on the surface and the other farmers nearby are trying to meet the fire if it should reach them.

Fires of this kind are bad to the farmer in more ways than one and the ground which it passes over is practically useless for many years.

Due to a scarcity of water the farmers are certainly finding it extra hard work in battling against the flames.

WORK STARTED

Contractors Begin the Sewer Work Awarded by the City Government Near the South Pond

Small and Taggart, the firm who have been awarded the contract to rebuild the Richards avenue and Parrott avenue sewer, began work today and made the start on the line near the front of Rogers street.

AT THE NAVY YARD

The Eagle was moved to equipment dock this morning and she will sail on Wednesday.

The Paducah came out of the dry dock this noon to make room for the Maine.

The New Hampshire will be the next battleship here.

The Maine was alive with visitors today.

While the Maine was docking this dialogue was heard:

Officer of dock to officer on the dock—"Do you ever get any bad blows here?"

Officer on the dock—"The only blows we get come from the department."

Officer of the dock—"What kind of weather are you going to give us?"

Officer on the dock—"We will give you the best; you are now in God's country."

The dock is off. Now gentlemen at Washington. Portsmouth demands her share of the work.

SEABROOK

Mrs. Mary J. Jones, an aged lady in town, was the recipient of a fine birthday cake from one of her daughters on the event of her birthday anniversary yesterday. It was handsomely frosted and bore the date of her birthday 187 and that of the latter anniversary, 1898.

Portions of the sidewalk of the Broad road have been built up and gravelled making it an improvement for pedestrians who frequent the thoroughfare.

The work of the city street cleaners and the weeds alongside of the road from the depot to Main street shows the improvement made. We learn that Hunt's Island, so-called, is undergoing a cleansing and a tending up.

Olis Green, who has typhoid fever, is now at the home of his parents in town.

Thomas F. Beckman has been chosen juror for the October term of court held in Portsmouth.

ANNUAL MEETING COTTAGE HOSPITAL

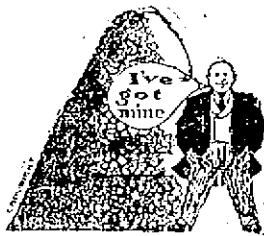

Two New Directors Elected And Large Sum Received From Nurses

At the adjourned annual meeting of the Portsmouth Cottage Hospital, held on Friday, the sum of $357 was most gratefully received by the directors from the nurses. This is a fund that was raised by the nurses of the hospital both at present and in the past, and was given to the hospital repair fund. $157.00 was received from the dancing party given at the Chamberlaine hotel under the auspices of the nurses. The directors are especially grateful for this gift, as it is a token of the good will of the nurses who have worked at the hospital.

Mrs. John W. Parsons was elected a director to represent the Unitarian Free bed and Mrs. Basil Anglin was made a member to represent the Frank Jones Brewing Company free bed.

The other directors re-elected were Mrs. E. P. Kimball, Mrs. H. E. Hovey, Miss Mary Meyers treasurer and Mrs. Anna H. Hewitt secretary. The report show that the hospital has had a very good year and with more cases attended than for many years.

At the same meeting Dr. E. B. Eastman and Dr. Samuel T. Ladd were added to the hospital physician staff.
